It's November 30, 1962. Native Brit George Falconer, an English professor at a Los Angeles area college, is finding it difficult to cope with life. Jim, his personal partner of sixteen years, died in a car accident eight months earlier. This day, George has decided to get his affairs in order before he will commit suicide that evening. George reminisces about his life with Jim but spends his day with various people, who see a man sadder than usual and who affect his own thoughts about what he is going to do. Those people include Carlos, a Spanish immigrant, Charley, his best friend who he knew from England, who romantically desires George despite his sexual orientation; and Kenny Potter, one of his students, who seems to be curious about his professor beyond English class.
